case of the town of Amherst against H. Coleman Loving was refused. The case resulted from a fine of $20 im-posed by the town of Amherst upon Loving for selling cigars and tobacco in violation of city ordinance, requiring a liceuse. The ruling of the Circuit Court of Amherst county was sustained. The appeal was on the ground that the Mayor and Town Council had that the Mayor and Town Council had no authority to levy the license, as they had not at that time filed sworn election expense accounts. The town of Amherst was incorporated April 15, 1910, and the ordinance in question adopted July 19, 1910.

and many friends of McNamara in this city and in his sad fate. McNamara was a native and for many years a resident of Petersburg, leaving here to engage in work in the silk mills in Williamsport, Pa. He had a good position, was happily married and had two children, to whom he was devoted. Towards the last of December his mother died, and he came to Petersburg to attend the funeral. He bade his friends good-by, to return home. Some days later a letter was received here from his wife, making anxious inquiries about him, as she had heard nothing of him since his coming to Petersburg. Nothing was known of his whereabouts ntil announcement came that he had ocen drowned near Fairmont, Md., while attempting to escape from an oyster boat, on which he had been forced to serve. His friends here and in Willamsport at once formed the opinion hat he had been drugged and shanghaied in Baltimore, and in that condi-tion had been pressed into the oyster dredging business. The result of the investigation that was started has been he arrest in Baltimore.

Some time in January, the captain, mate and cook of the oyster boat on which McNamara lost his life were murdered by the crew. Elks Elect Officers.
